THE DICKINSON SCHOOL OF LAW

From the Admissions Office . . .

The Dickinson School of Law has been a force in American legal education for more than 160 years. Its mission continues to be the educating of students to be competent practicing lawyers. A balanced curriculum combines practice with theory, using a diversified full-time faculty, ably assisted by experienced, part-time instructors, many of whom are practicing attorneys, judges, and specialists. Small class sizes and a diverse student body create a warm atmosphere that promotes scholarship.

The Carlisle location of The Dickinson School of Law, the oldest law school in Pennsylvania, is seen as an advantage by those students who do not wish to study in a big city environment. Yet the School is close to major East Coast centers and is situated only 20 miles from the state capital in Harrisburg, where students may find part-time and full-time law-related jobs. Students have access to the Law School's extensive library facilities twenty-four hours a day. The School is located adjacent to the Dickinson College campus and thereby enjoys the social, intellectual and cultural advantages of such an arrangement, although the two schools are unrelated.

The trademarks of a Dickinson Law education—thorough academic preparation, concentration on practical lawyering skills, personal attention to student needs by administration and faculty, an attractive setting—are reasons why alumni and students have always treasured their legal education here.

The Dickinson School of Law is approved by the American Bar Association and the New York State Board of Regents. It is a member of the Association of American Law Schools and the National Association for Law Placement. Adherence to the principle of equal education and employment opportunity on the basis of merit for all people regardless of race, color, sex, sexual orientation, handicap, religion, ancestry, national origin or age is a fundamental, traditional and continuing policy at The Dickinson School of Law.
