

Fall 2013

Filial Support Laws in the Modern Era: Domestic and International Comparison of Enforcement Practices for Laws Requiring Adult Children to Support Indigent Parents

Katherine C. Pearson

Penn State Dickinson School of Law

Follow this and additional works at: http://elibrary.law.psu.edu/fac_works

 Part of the Comparative and Foreign Law Commons, Elder Law Commons, Family Law Commons, and the Health Law and Policy Commons

Recommended Citation

Katherine C. Pearson, Filial Support Laws in the Modern Era: Domestic and International Comparison of Enforcement Practices for Laws Requiring Adult Children to Support Indigent Parents, 20 Elder L.J. 269 (2013).

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Works at Penn State Law eLibrary. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal Articles by an authorized administrator of Penn State Law eLibrary. For more information, please contact ram6023@psu.edu.

© Katherine C. Pearson, June 8 2012. Accepted for publication by Elder Law Journal at University of Illinois School of Law, forthcoming Fall 2012.

Filial Support Laws in the Modern Era: Domestic and International Comparison of Enforcement Practices for Laws Requiring Adult Children to Support Indigent Parents

By Katherine C. Pearson¹
Professor of Law
The Pennsylvania State University
The Dickinson School of Law

Abstract

Family responsibility and support laws have a long but mixed history. When first enacted, policy makers used such laws to declare an official policy that family members should support each other, rather than draw upon public resources. This article tracks modern developments with filial support laws that purport to obligate adult children to financially assist their parents, if indigent or needy. The author diagrams filial support laws that have survived in the 21st Century and compares core components in the United States (including Puerto Rico) and post-Soviet Union Ukraine. While the laws are often similar in wording and declared intent, this article demonstrates that enforcement practices are quite different among the two countries, even as both countries struggle with aging populations and recession. In addition, the author analyzes a potentially disturbing trend emerging in at least two U.S. states, most significantly Pennsylvania, where filial support laws are now a primary collection tool for nursing homes, with decisions against adult children running to thousands of dollars in retroactive “support.” The article closes with concerns for policy makers in any state or country considering filial support as an alternative or supplement to public funding for long-term care or health care for the elderly.

I. Introduction

In the United States, financial obligations under family law are primarily a matter for the states rather than the federal government and the rules are usually provided by specific state statutes, rather than common law. All fifty states have statutes that obligate certain adults to care for or financially support certain other family members.² For example, state laws in the United States routinely provide for awards of alimony among divorced or separated spouses (“spousal support”) and obligate noncustodial parents to pay support for their minor-aged children (“child support”).³ In addition, in some instances, parents can also be obligated to pay support for adult-aged children, although usually that obligation is tied to a continuing disability that preexisted age 18, the usual age of emancipation.⁴

¹ My deep appreciation and gratitude go to Professor William E. Butler, for his translations from Ukrainian to English of the Ukrainian Family Code, and to Dr. Nataliya Davydova, Visiting Scholar at the Pennsylvania State University, for providing key research and translation assistance for Ukrainian cases. In addition, I am indebted to Penn State Law students, Matthew McDonald (Class of 2014), Joshua Veith (Class of 2014), Kacie Coughlin (Class of 2012) and Shauna Haney (Class of 2013), for their important research and support.

When asked by colleagues working in Ukraine to write an article on U.S. family law for Ukrainian lawyers and academics, the author recognized this was an opportunity to analyze an additional category of support obligation laws that exist in some but not all U.S. states, and to compare these state laws to Ukrainian law.⁵ State laws that obligate adult children to support their parents are sometimes called “parental support,” “family responsibility,” “family support,” or “filial support” laws and the latter title will be used in this article. Slightly more than half of the American states (plus Puerto Rico, a U.S. territory) have statutes that in theory can be used to require adult children to provide financial support for their parents.

The current filial support statutes in the U.S. can be traced back in time to poverty measures in the first American colonies and, earlier, to the system of “Poor Laws” enacted during the 16th century reign of Queen Elizabeth in England.⁶ At one time as many as forty-five of the fifty U.S. states had filial support statutes.⁷ In some instances, the laws created mutual financial assistance obligations, not only among adult children and parents, but also to and from grandparents.⁸ England repealed its filial support provisions (requiring children to “relieve and ² Homer H. Clark, THE LAW OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES Chapters 6, 16, 17 (2d Ed., West Publishing Co. 1988).

³ Homer H. Clark, THE LAW OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES 443-56 (2d Ed., West Publishing Co. 1988) (discussing jurisdiction for divorce, alimony and child support).

⁴ E.g., Hastings v. Hastings, 841 So. 2d 484 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2003) (concluding there is a common law right of support for a dependent adult child, disabled since his minority). See also Buhai, Sande L., Parental Support of Adult Children with Disabilities, 91 MINNESOTA LAW REVIEW 710, 725-26 (2007).

⁵ This article is an expansion on an article titled “Filial Support Laws in the United States and Ukraine: A Modern Comparison of Laws Requiring Adult Children to Support Indigent Parents,” to be published in the Ukrainian language in ____ [insert publication data when available].

⁶ 43 Eliz. c. 2, 2 Eng. Stat. at L.702, sec. 7. See also Carleson v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 100 Cal. Rptr. 635, 643 (Cal. 3d Dist. Ct. App. 1972) (tracing the statutory origins of California’s public policy on filial support), opinion vacated by Swoap v. Superior Court, 10 Cal. 3d 490 (Cal. 1973); Buhai, Sande L., Parental Support of Adult Children with Disabilities, 91 MINNESOTA LAW REVIEW 710, 713 (2007).

⁷ Terrance A. Kline, A Rational Role for Filial Responsibility Laws in Modern Society?, 26 FAMILY LAW QUARTERLY 195, 196 (1992).

⁸ The statutory language involving grandparents was largely repealed in the mid-Twentieth Century. E.g., Com. Ex rel. Bradley v. Bradley, 146 A.2d 147, 149 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1958) (discussing 1948 amendment to Pennsylvania law eliminating support obligations for grandparents). See also Kermit L. Hall, William M. Wiecek, & Paul Finkelman, AMERICAN LEGAL HISTORY 45-46 (2d Ed., Oxford Univ. Press. 1996); Walter I. Trattner, FROM POOR LAW TO WELFARE STATE: A HISTORY OF SOCIAL WELFARE IN AMERICA 11 (6th Ed., Free Press, 1999).

maintain” their parents) entirely in 1948.⁹ As this article explains, many U.S. states also repealed filial support statutes as Medicaid became the dominant focus of poor relief.

This article begins with analysis of a typical, surviving filial support statute in the U.S. and compares it to filial support laws in Ukraine (Section II). Next, this article compares current usages of the laws, looking at the majority trend in the U.S. and sample cases in Ukraine (Section III).¹⁰ To assist readers in identifying the varying state discussions of filial support, the author provides a table of filial support laws currently on the books in U.S. states, as well as citations to U.S. cases discussing application.¹¹

Despite a lengthy history of U.S. laws that purport to mandate support for indigent parents, enforcement of the surviving filial support laws against adult children in the United States is rare in modern times, especially as compared to enforcement of minor child or spousal support laws. Public benefit systems became the dominant focus for relief of the aged (Section IV), with states struggling to resolve questions about individual eligibility and family obligations, particularly whether to mandate any obligation for families to reimburse the public purse. Within the last fifty years (from the 1960s forward), a time during which enforcement of child support and spousal support laws increased substantially, enforcement of filial support laws waned, with surviving laws largely ignored, both by individual citizens and courts in the United States.

As one commentary observes in discussing family support provisions contained in early legislative efforts to address poverty in America, “[t]here was nothing gentle or humane about the colonial poor laws by the standards of the late twentieth century. Over all of them hung the odor of moral disapproval.”¹² And yet there may be new reasons for American courts to be called upon to enforce filial support laws.¹³ “Baby boomers” (persons born during the Post-World War II baby boom, between 1946 and 1964) have begun to reach their senior years, potentially posing a huge need for expensive health and long-term care, especially dementia-related care.¹⁴ The U.S. National Institute of Health estimates there are now 5 million Americans

⁹ National Assistance Act, 1948, 11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 29, preamble (Eng.) (repealing filial support and other provisions) (available at <http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ukpga/Geo6/11-12/29/introduction>).

¹⁰ For comparative purposes, Ukraine’s physical size, 603,550 square kilometers, is roughly equivalent to the size of Texas (696,200 square kilometers), the second largest state in the U.S. The population of Ukraine, estimated in 2012 as 45.8 million, is approximately 15% of the total U.S. population (313 million). U.S. Department of State, Background Note: Ukraine (June 5, 2012, 2:45 p.m.), <http://www.state.gov/r/pa/ei/bgn/3211.htm>.

¹¹ See attached Table.

¹² Kermit L. Hall, William M. Wiecek, & Paul Finkelman, AMERICAN LEGAL HISTORY 46 (2d Ed., Oxford Univ. Press, 1996)

¹³ Seymour Moskowitz, Filial Responsibility Statutes: Legal and Policy Considerations, 9 JOURNAL OF LAW AND POLICY, 709, 720-22 (2001) (discussing the respective merits of opposing arguments for the enforcement of filial responsibility laws).

¹⁴ Long-Term Care: Aging Baby Boom Generation Will Increase Demand and Burden on Federal and State Budgets, General Accounting Office Testimony before the Special Committee on Aging, U.S. Senate, (Statement of David M. Walker, Comptroller General of the United States on March 21, 2002) (available at <http://www.gao.gov/new.items/d02544t.pdf>).

with Alzheimer's disease, an amount that could more than double by 2050.¹⁵ What role should a family's resources play in age-related care in the 21st Century and should contribution be mandated?

Health care costs and long-term care costs for older adults are factors not well captured by traditional measures of poverty used for younger persons. One report predicts that more than sixteen percent of the 38 million Americans over age 65 may already need financial assistance under a more realistic, revised poverty formula.¹⁶ Thus, the demographics of aging citizens, the associated potential for costly long-term care, and the economic recession that began in 2008, combine to trigger new consideration of ways to finance age-related care, and for some policy makers this includes reconsideration of filial support laws. Indeed, as set forth in Section V of this article, case reports and news reports from Pennsylvania demonstrate a potentially significant trend, where third-party creditors are using filial support laws to compel payment or cooperation by adult children to cover their parents' costs in nursing homes or similar care settings. While the Pennsylvania trend is echoed in at least one other state, South Dakota, Section VI of this article demonstrates that a lack of national consensus in application of filial support laws can create inconsistent results among U.S. states, which may increase the potential for results that seem surprising or unfair.

At Section VII, the author returns to comparisons of enforcement practices in the U.S. and Ukraine laws. The seemingly systematic approach of Ukraine, a post-Soviet Union country faced with daunting financial demands, contrasts sharply with the inconsistent, and at times dramatic, examples of enforcement in the U.S., and the comparison suggests concerns for future decision-makers in both countries.

II. Comparison of U.S. and Ukrainian Filial Support Laws Affecting Duties of Adult Children to Parents

In the United States, the filial support law of Virginia is typical of the surviving civil laws that have their roots in colonial times. The Virginia statute, codified at Virginia Code Annotated Section 20-88, opens with a broad statement of duty and scope, providing that "It shall be the ... duty of all persons eighteen years of age or over, of sufficient earning capacity or income, after reasonably providing for his or her own immediate family, to assist in providing for the support and maintenance of his or her mother or father, he or she being then and there in necessitous circumstances.”¹⁷ The statute goes on to provide courts with the power to determine and order payment, including allocating contributions among several children.¹⁸

¹⁵ Health and Human Services Press Room, We Can't Wait: Administration Announces New Steps to Fight Alzheimer's Disease, National Institute on Aging (May 25, 2012, 3:31 PM), <http://www.nia.nih.gov/newsroom/2012/02/we-cant-wait-administration-announces-new-steps-fight-alzheimers-disease>.

¹⁶ Kathleen Short, The Research Supplemental Poverty Measure, 2010 Report, Figure 1 (2011) available at <http://www.census.gov/hhes/povmeas/methodology/supplemental/research.html>.

Virginia’s statute permits the adult child to raise a defense based on “substantial evidence of desertion, neglect, abuse or willful failure” by the parent to support the child as a minor.¹⁹ In addition to civil liability for support payments, the statute provides that an adult child who violates an order requiring support for the parent is liable for a misdemeanor crime.²⁰

Virginia’s law was amended in the 1970s and 80s to restrict primary filial responsibility if the parent became eligible for public benefits under Medicaid, while permitting the state the option of seeking reimbursement from a child or children for “a parent receiving such assistance or services . . . as the court may determine to be reasonable.”²¹ The reimbursement potential was capped in Virginia, providing that “children shall in no case be responsible for such costs for more than sixty months of institutionalization.”²²

The structure of the Virginia statute can be seen as a fairly typical example of surviving filial support laws found in several U.S. states.²³ There are at least seven important components that should be (but are not always) addressed by the surviving statutes:

(1) a general statement of obligation of the adult child to the parent (which may or may not be reciprocal);

(2) language establishing grounds for financial liability (such as Virginia’s grounds, the parent’s “necessitous circumstances” or Pennsylvania’s undefined “indigent” status);²⁴

(3) a provision prioritizing liability among several children or other obligors (such as Virginia’s language providing obligated parties shall “jointly and severally share . . . duty”);²⁵

(4) a statement of any exceptions to liability (such as a child who was not cared for sufficiently by the parent while a minor);

(5) a provision for who has standing as claimants;

(6) a provision harmonizing the law with any relief provided by welfare programs, such as Medicaid;, and ¹⁷ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

¹⁸ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

¹⁹ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

²⁰ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

²¹ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

²² VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

²³ Alaska, California, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Virginia and West Virginia. See also Puerto Rico. Attached Table.

²⁴ Compare VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010) with 23 Pa. Cons Stat. Ann. § 4603(a) (West 2010).

²⁵ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

(7) a mechanism for enforcement.

Some states, such as Virginia, have an eighth component, a criminal sanction or other penalty for failure to satisfy the identified civil duty.²⁶ Attached to this article is a Table of all U.S. states (plus Puerto Rico and Washington D.C.), providing the citation to the laws of 29 states that impose some form of filial support obligation. Of these states, including Virginia, only 20 have language that appears to give an indigent or otherwise needy parent legal standing to bring a direct action for support against one or more children.²⁷

Some states provide an express list of statutory factors to be used in deciding the amount of any adult child's liability. For example, in California, the court is required to consider the "circumstances of each party," including "[e]arning capacity and needs," "[o]bligations and assets," "[a]ge and health," "[s]tandard of living," and "[o]ther factors the court deems just and equitable."²⁸ Other states appear to trust the "discretion" of the court, or place a cap on overall liability.²⁹ Puerto Rico, an unincorporated territory of the United States, provides that in addition to "financial capacity" of the obligated child, the court shall take into account "non-monetary factors, such as company, care, and services" provided by family members.³⁰

Several states, Kentucky, Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Ohio, have only a criminal sanction for failure to support, thus providing the parent with no direct right of action against an adult child.³¹ Some states impose financial obligations on adult children in very limited circumstances, such as Arkansas's law providing that children can be secondarily liable, after the state, for a needy parent's mental health care,³² or Connecticut's law limiting the child's legal liability to failure to support a needy parent under the age of 65.³³ In Nevada, the child's duty to cover certain expenses assumed by the county is triggered only by a child's written promise to support the parent.³⁴ In Tennessee, the Welfare Department may have standing to require

²⁶ VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

²⁷ Alaska, California, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Virginia and West Virginia. In addition Puerto Rico provides for a direct right of action by the parent against the child. Attached Table.

²⁸ Cal. Fam. Code §4404 (West 2004). See also P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 8 §712(f) (2009), (available at <http://www.lexisnexis.com.ar>) (2009).

²⁹ Compare VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010) (sixty months) with 23 Pa. Cons Stat. Ann. § 4603(b) (West 2010) (providing that for "medical assistance for the aged other than public nursing home care," the obligated party is liable for the lesser of actual costs or an amount to be determined under a statutory formula.).

³⁰ P.R. LAWS ANN. tit. 8 §712(d) (2009), (available at <http://www.lexisnexis.com>) (2009). See also P.R. LAWS ANN. tit. 8 §736 (2009).

³¹ KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 530.050 (West 2006); MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. ch. 273, § 20 (West 2000); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-326.1 (2009); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2919.21 (West 2006).

³² ARK. CODE ANN. § 20-47-106 (West, Westlaw through end of 2012 Fiscal Sess.).

³³ CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53-304 (West, Westlaw through May 8, 2012).

³⁴ NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 428.070 (2009).

reimbursement from responsible children, but the statute does not appear to provide a direct cause of action for parents against children.³⁵

One state, Idaho, actually repealed its filial support law recently, in 2011.³⁶ The sponsors of the Idaho repeal explained that the statute was obsolete and could confuse potential applicants for public benefits or nursing home care.³⁷

By comparison, Ukrainian law also sets forth a general obligation of the adult child to parents and provides courts with the power to enforce the laws. Article 172 of the Family Code of Ukraine provides a “Duty of Child and Daughters and Sons Who Have Reached Majority to be Concerned about Parents.”³⁸ Section 1 of Article 172 appears to be a statement of both moral obligation and financial responsibility, declaring that “A child and son and daughter who have reached majority shall be obliged to be concerned about parents, display concern for them, and render assistance to them.”³⁹ Section 3 of Article 172 authorizes court enforcement of financial obligations, providing that “If a daughter or son who has reached majority is not concerned about his parents unable to work and infirm, means to cover expenses connected with rendering such concern may be recovered from them by decision of the court.”⁴⁰

Ukrainian law sets forth more detailed financial obligations of sons and daughters to their parents at Articles 202 through 206 of the Family Code of Ukraine.⁴¹ In these sections, Ukrainian law permits the court to award alimony in a fixed monetary amount and/or as a share of earnings, taking into account the positions of the parties.⁴² If the parent is gravely ill or disabled, the court can also decree that a child with sufficient earnings or revenue must cover expenses for treatment and care of the parent.⁴³

³⁵ TENN. CODE ANN. § 71-5-114 (2004).

³⁶ IDAHO CODE ANN. § 32-1002 (repealed July 2011).

³⁷ 2011 Ida. SB 1043, available at http://www.lexisnexis.com/lawschool/research/default.aspx?ORIENTATION_CODE=00092&signoff=off.

³⁸ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 172: The Duty of a Child, Adult Daughter and Son to Care for Parents. The English translation used here is from William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 60 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011). In addition, a Ukrainian language source for Ukrainian law is available on the internet, at http://kodeksy.com.ua/simejnj_kodeks_ukraini/statja-172.htm (last visited May 29, 2012). Hereafter the citations for the Ukrainian Family Code will be to the Butler text only.

³⁹ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 172: The Duty of a Child, Adult Daughter and Son to Care for Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 60 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁴⁰ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 172: The Duty of a Child, Adult Daughter and Son to Care for Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 60 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁴¹ Family Code of Ukraine - Articles 202-206, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 72-73 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁴² Family Code of Ukraine - Article 202: Grounds for Duty Adult Daughter, Son, Keep Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 72-73 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁴³ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 202: Grounds for Duty Adult Daughter, Son, Keep Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 72-73 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

Ukrainian law appears to recognize two possible defenses to liability.⁴⁴ Under Article 202 (2) of the Family Code of Ukraine, the child does not have an obligation to maintain a parent who was deprived of parental rights by the court, and under Article 204 the child may be relieved of a duty to maintain parents or pay expenses “if it is established that the mother or father evaded the performance of their parental duties.”⁴⁵

Thus, the plain language of statutes in Virginia (and in other states in the United States)⁴⁶ and Ukraine is similar on the question of whether adult children have a legally enforceable obligation to provide financial support for parents who are unable to support themselves. As will be discussed in Section III, the difference is in how the plain language is enforced.

III. Comparison of Enforcement of Filial Support Laws in Requiring Adult Children to Support Parents

As summarized on the attached Table, only twenty-nine of the fifty states currently have any form of filial support statutes that address adult children of indigent parents. As has been explained by U.S. courts, there is no general common law obligation of support running from adult child to parent, regardless of need.⁴⁷ Therefore, in the absence of a statute, a needy parent in the United States has no legal recourse against an adult child for financial support.

In all but two of the twenty-nine states,⁴⁸ it has become rare for the appellate courts to address the question of filial support, and research in twenty-seven states reveals no officially reported appellate decisions affirming an award of filial support against adult children during the last thirty or more years.⁴⁹ For example, Virginia, as described above, has a long-standing filial support law that could be used to obligate adult children to pay support for an indigent parent.⁵⁰ Research in Lexis and Westlaw legal databanks for both officially and unofficially published decisions decided under the Virginia statute discloses episodic enforcement over the full history of the statute.⁵¹ During the last fifty years, however, there is only one lower court decision imposing financial liability on an adult child. In Peyton v. Peyton, a Virginia trial court case from 1978, an adult son sued his adult brother, seeking contribution towards the cost of nursing ⁴⁴ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 202: Grounds for Duty Adult Daughter, Son, Keep Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 72-73 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁴⁵ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 202: Grounds for Duty Adult Daughter, Son, Keep Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 72-73 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁴⁶ See footnote ____ (currently 23), supra, and the attached Table.

⁴⁷ E.g., Sharpe v. Sharpe, 163 A.2d 923, 924-5 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1960) (concurring opinion); Dawson v. Dawson, 12 Iowa 512 (Iowa, 1861) (distinguishing the “perfect” common law duty of parent to support minor children, from the need for a statute in order to impose a legal duty on adult child to support parent, regardless of whatever obligation may exist “by the law of nature”; also refusing to permit third parties to invoke statutory duty of adult child to support parent as grounds for payment of parent’s accrued debt).

⁴⁸ The exception states are Pennsylvania and South Dakota, as discussed in Section V, infra.

⁴⁹ See attached Table.

⁵⁰ VA. CODE ANN. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010).

⁵¹ E.g., Mitchell-Powers Hardware Co. v. Eaton, 198 S.E. 496 (Va. 1938) (recognizing that prior to 1927 there was no legal obligation running from child to parent, and that this was changed by the adoption of the Virginia statute, thus requiring remand for further proceedings).

home care for their incapacitated mother.⁵² The reluctant brother was making voluntary payments of $150 (USD) per month in support for his mother, but the court determined that based on the respective incomes of the parties, the defendant son would also be responsible to reimburse his brother for an additional $8,000 (USD) for costs of past care.⁵³

In the United States, it can be difficult to research whether contemporary courts are being asked to enforce filial support laws. First, the courts of primary jurisdiction (state trial courts), do not routinely publish their opinions in official reporters.⁵⁴ Second, unlike child support, filial support laws do not have a single, identifiable label to assist researchers when using unofficial reporting tools.⁵⁵ Thus, it is possible that filial suits are filed in state trial courts, but are difficult to identify because the cases are resolved, settled, and never appealed. Nonetheless, it seems unlikely that there are significant numbers of such cases because of the absence of reported appellate case decisions citing to the filial support laws. Further, the author's search for "parental support," "filial support," "family responsibility," or "family support" reveals hundreds of cases in both official and unofficial reporters, but the cases usually involve a parent's obligation to pay child support for a minor dependent or a spouse's obligation to pay spousal support.⁵⁶ The relatively few appellate cases that discuss application of specific state filial support laws are captured on the attached Table and suggest that in most U.S. states during the last thirty to fifty years, the surviving laws have rarely been used to establish filial support orders.

By comparison, in Ukraine, research conducted on the electronic data bank at <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua>, which covers cases decided during or after 2004, reveals 113 cases ⁵² Peyton v. Peyton, 8 Va. Cir. 531, 531 (Va. Cir. Ct. 1978) (also available at 1978 Va. Cir. LEXIS 19).

⁵³ Peyton v. Peyton, 8 Va. Cir. 531, 531 (Va. Cir. Ct. 1978). Research also reveals one "recent" case enforcing filial support laws in Puerto Rico. In Chavez v. Hernandez et al., Civil Núm. KAL 2005-1188, 2008 WL 5561018 (TCA), (P.R. Cir. 2008) (in Spanish, using a translation, with assistance from Google Translate and Research Assistant Matthew McDonald), four family members were ordered to contribute to the support of their mother by paying a total of $1,846.32 monthly, with each paying $461.58. The equal amounts were confirmed on appeal despite evidence the mother had a long interval of no contact with one daughter, "abandonment" that was later "reconciled." The appellate court also ordered the children responsible for a total of $19,026.80 in retroactive payments. Id.

⁵⁴ As noted by legal researchers willing to tackle the daunting challenge of creating statistical records by mining unpublished trial court opinions, it is possible that perceptions about the American legal system become distorted because legal analysts so often depend on published, appellate opinions, which may be comparatively few in number and tied to narrow issues. See Theodore Eisenberg & Michael Heise, "Plaintiphobia in State Court? An Empirical Study of State Court Trials on Appeal," 38 JOURNAL OF LEGAL STUDIES 121 (2009). See also J. Thomas Sullivan, "Unpublished Opinions and No Citation Rules in the Trial Courts," 47 Arizona Law Review 419, 421 (2005) (arguing that unpublished decisions by appellate court, even though unofficial in terms of precedent, could provide important guidance to trial judges and trial attorneys); The Federal Courts Study Committee, Report of the Federal Courts Study Committee, 130 (1990) (discussing the practical reasons for unpublished opinions at the appellate level).

⁵⁵ For example, Virginia's filial support statute, Va. Code Ann. 20-88, has the title "Support of parents by children." A search using terms such as "parent and child and support" will result in thousands of cases on Westlaw or Lexis for Virginia cases using those terms results in more than a thousand cases, because of the overlapping use of these terms for cases involving minor child support.

⁵⁶ Id.

citing Section 172, Family Code of Ukraine.⁵⁷ The Ukrainian cases demonstrate that when the statute is invoked, the courts will impose liability on the adult child to care for or financially support a parent in need. Examples of cases decided recently under Section 172 include:

- The 2011 decision by the court in the Khortytskyi District in the Zaporizhzhya region (Case Number 2-2382/2011, decided 11/16/2011), where a son, employed as a foreman in a factory, was found liable to pay one quarter of his monthly income to support his mother, who was seriously ill with heart disease and kidney disease, for as long as his mother was in need of medical supplies, food and other material assistance.⁵⁸
- The 2011 decision by the court in the Kirov District in the Dnipropetrovsk region (Case Number 2-824/2011r, decided 5/20/2011), where an adult son was held liable to pay 1000 hrivna (Ukrainian currency) monthly to his elderly disabled father, which was roughly equivalent to $125 (USD) per month. The court noted that the father, a World War II veteran with high expenses for medicine, had made repeated requests for assistance to his son, a director at a regional music and drama theater. The son, who was married with no minor children, reportedly refused. The lump sum awarded by the court appeared to be slightly less than one-quarter of the son's monthly income of 4,447 hrivna.⁵⁹
- The 2010 decision by the court in the Sniguivska District of the Mykolayiv region, (Case Number 2-295/2010, decided 4/14/2010), where the son (who was also paying child support for a minor child) was held liable to pay one-third of his income to assist his father and mother, who were disabled and living on a combined pension at a subsistence minimum level equivalent to approximately $200 (USD) per month.⁶⁰
- The 2009 decision by the court in the Novomoskovsk District of the Dnipropetrovsk region (Case Number 2-1863/09, decided 3/18/2009), where the son was ordered to contribute one-quarter of his monthly income to supplement his divorced mother's monthly pension, because she was retired, ⁵⁷ Single State Register of Judgments in Ukraine at <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁵⁸ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-2382 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/19487697> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁵⁹ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-824p <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/16234296> (last visited June 7, 2012).

⁶⁰ Single State Register of Judgments- Case # 2-295 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/8893598> (last visited May 27, 2012).

living alone, lacked funds for medicine and utilities, and was unable to stand on her feet in lines.⁶¹

- The 2009 decision by the court in the Dicanskogo District of the Poltava region (Case Number 2-322/09, decided 10/8/2009), where the court ordered a son to pay a lump sum in Ukrainian currency, roughly equivalent to $10 dollars (USD) per month, to assist his elderly father with the purchase of food and medicine.⁶²

By U.S. standards, the percentages of income (one-quarter to one-third of the adult child's income) awarded in three of the five cases appear to be surprisingly large shares.⁶³ In these cases, the courts do not report the adult child's total monthly salary, only the percentage awarded. The monetary value of the percentages, however, when converted to U.S. currency equivalents, appear to be modest in size and similar to the lump sum amounts awarded in the other two Ukraine cases.⁶⁴ For example, to analyze the first case reported above, the court ordered the child to pay one quarter of his monthly income to his parent.⁶⁵ According to government statistics, the average 2011 salary for the region in question, the Zaporizhzhya region of Ukraine, is 2607 hrivna per month.⁶⁶ One quarter of that average monthly income (650 hrivna) would be the equivalent of approximately $81 USD, using the applicable exchange rate of $1 USD = 8 hrivna.⁶⁷ This calculation, of course, does not take into account taxes or the potential for unreported income in Ukraine. Nonetheless, the comparatively high percentages of incomes involved in Ukrainian filial awards demonstrate the potential hardship on the adult child from an award of support. At the same time, the cases demonstrate the impact of poverty – and the importance of even a few “dollars” extra per month – for the elder parent.

In addition to direct support awards, the Ukrainian Family Code also supports denial of inheritance rights where the adult child is shown to have failed to provide the parent with ⁶¹ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-1863 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/10793926> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁶² Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-322 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/5428486> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁶³ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-2382 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/19487697> (last visited May 27, 2012); Single State Register of Judgments- Case # 2-295 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/8893598> (last visited May 27, 2012); Single State Register of Judgments- Case # 2-1863, <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/10793926> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁶⁴ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-322, <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/5428486> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁶⁵ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-295, <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/19487697> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁶⁶ State Statistics Services of Ukraine, <http://www.ukrstat.gov.ua> (last visited May 27, 2012)

⁶⁷ Single State Register of Judgments - Case # 2-295 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/19487697> (last visited May 27, 2012).

adequate financial support and consideration.⁶⁸ The following case summaries from recent trials in the Ukraine provide examples:

- The 2010 decision by the court in the Dniprovskiy District in Kiev (Case Number 2-1905/09, decided 4/15/2010), where a statutory inheritance was denied to one daughter, permitting the mother's entire estate (including an apartment and money in a savings account) to go to another daughter who had provided care, in accordance with terms in the mother's will. The evidence showed the mother was disabled with a heart condition and died at the age of 89. The denial of inheritance was ordered even though the daughter testified that she lived some distance away, did visit her mother, had a good relationship with her mother, and that offers of help were refused, possibly because of the influence of the local daughter. The court noted that sons and daughters must take care of parents in order to satisfy Article 172's obligation to show concern and offer assistance.⁶⁹
- The 2009 decision by the court in the Perchersk District in Kiev (Case Number 2-3842/09, decided 12/24/2009), where a neighbor and his wife who provided care to a 90 year old man before his death were permitted to inherit fully under the man's will. The court rejected the statutory inheritance claim of the son, citing the son's failed duties under Article 172. The court observed that the evidence established that the father had suffered a stroke and was confined to his apartment. The son's phone calls to his father were not adequate to show he gave his father necessary consideration, and the court rejected evidence that the son's failure to visit could be explained by being unaware of the father's worsening health, or by the fact the son had a sick wife and was living in another city.⁷⁰

The author's examination of Ukrainian cases has been limited and constrained by lack of personal familiarity with the context and language; the author has relied on translations. Therefore, the author is cautious in offering observations. At the same time, however, interesting questions are raised by the modern research demonstrating comparatively greater use of the filial support law in Ukraine than in U.S. states. In part, the difference may be explained by the historical role of Medicaid in the United States in paying for health care for the poor as well as being the primary payer for long-term care costs in nursing homes, as discussed in the next section.

⁶⁸ Family Code of Ukraine - Article 172: The Duty of a Child, Adult Daughter and Son to Care for Parents, William E. Butler, FAMILY CODE OF UKRAINE 60 (Editorial Office of the Legal Journal Law of Ukraine 2011).

⁶⁹ Single State Register of Judgments- Case # 2-1905 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/9511622> (last visited May 27, 2012).

⁷⁰ Single State Register of Judgments- Case # 2-3842 <http://reyestr.court.gov.ua/Review/7261574> (last visited May 27, 2012).

IV. The Impact of Public Benefit Systems for Older Adults in the U.S.

Adult children in the United States frequently provide direct care for their aging parents, or, alternatively finance in whole or in part the care that is provided by third parties. A 2011 study by AARP, the largest American advocacy organization for older adults, reports that “[t]wo out of three (66 percent) older people with disabilities who receive [long-term services and supports] at home get all their care exclusively from their family caregivers, mostly wives and adult daughters.”⁷¹ In addition, another twenty-six percent receive “some combination of family care and paid help; only 9 percent received paid help [in the home] alone.”⁷² The same study concluded that the “‘average’ U.S. caregiver is a 49-year-old woman who works outside the home and spends nearly 20 hours per week providing unpaid care to her mother for nearly five years.”⁷³ An estimate value for uncompensated care provided by family members to elders in the U.S. was $450 billion (USD) in 2009, up from $375 billion (USD) in 2007.⁷⁴ In the absence of significant evidence of state court cases seeking compelled parental support orders, it seems reasonable to conclude that such care provided by adult children is voluntary, resulting from feelings of personal devotion or moral duty.

Research suggests that filial support laws have long been, at best, a minor tool in providing practical, financial assistance to older adults. Looking to England, in 1909, a Poor Law Commission evaluated the impact of England’s long-standing filial support laws.⁷⁵ The majority in the Commission deplored what they described, more than a century ago, as the “weakness of a sense of filial responsibility in the present generation.”⁷⁶ In the commission report, while there were differences of opinion about solutions to the problem of poverty among the “aged and infirm,” it was apparent that filial support laws were largely viewed as more symbolic than practical, and the report cited instances of uneven application leading to harsh results in individual cases.⁷⁷ England repealed its filial support provisions in 1948.⁷⁸

⁷¹ Lynn Feinberg et al, Valuing the Invaluable: 2011 Update on the Growing Contributions and Costs of Family Caregiving 8 (AARP Public Policy Institute, 2011) available at <http://assets.aarp.org/rgcenter/ppi/ltc/i51-caregiving.pdf>.

⁷² Lynn Feinberg et al, Valuing the Invaluable: 2011 Update on the Growing Contributions and Costs of Family Caregiving 8 (AARP Public Policy Institute, 2011) available at <http://assets.aarp.org/rgcenter/ppi/ltc/i51-caregiving.pdf>.

⁷³ Lynn Feinberg et al, Valuing the Invaluable: 2011 Update on the Growing Contributions and Costs of Family Caregiving 1 (AARP Public Policy Institute, 2011) available at <http://assets.aarp.org/rgcenter/ppi/ltc/i51-caregiving.pdf>.

⁷⁴ Lynn Feinberg et al, Valuing the Invaluable: 2011 Update on the Growing Contributions and Costs of Family Caregiving 1 (AARP Public Policy Institute, 2011) available at <http://assets.aarp.org/rgcenter/ppi/ltc/i51-caregiving.pdf>.

⁷⁵ Poor Law Commission, New Poor Law or No Poor Law, Being a Description of the Majority and Minority Reports of the Poor Law Commission 102-111 (J.M Dent & Co) (1909), available at <http://babel.hathitrust.org/cgi/pt?id=mdp.35112104276599>.

⁷⁶ Id. at 107.

⁷⁷ Poor Law Commission, New Poor Law or No Poor Law, Being a Description of the Majority and Minority Reports of the Poor Law Commission 102-111 (J.M Dent & Co) (1909), available at <http://babel.hathitrust.org/cgi/pt?id=mdp.35112104276599>.

In the United States, filial support laws became less significant after the implementation of a national system of Social Security (1935), providing payments to any adult who had earned sufficient quarters of credit during his or her working years.⁷⁹ In 1964 the U.S. enacted a national system of health insurance for older adults, Medicare, and a combined federal/state system of health-related benefits including long-term care for impoverished, disabled elders, known nationally as Medicaid.⁸⁰ With the rise in availability and dependence on Medicare and Medicaid, the likelihood was lowered that courts would be called upon to determine filial support orders.⁸¹ The general U.S. prosperity of the latter half of the Twentieth Century, including a long period when workers were able to qualify for defined benefit retirement programs, also undoubtedly served to ease financing concerns for many families.⁸²

Public benefits under state and federal old-age programs could be viewed as the more important safety net for indigent older adults. However, case law in the United States often demonstrates a tension in attitudes towards the public's willingness to fund public benefit programs rather than insist on private responsibilities of families. For example, one trial judge felt compelled to enforce a long-standing filial support law against an adult son, despite evidence the father "was not worthy of any help," commenting "[b]oth this kind of case and this type of defense now appear frequently before this court by reason of the attempt of the relief authorities to compel children to support their parents before they become a public charge."⁸³ The judge nonetheless awarded only "$1 per week" for the father's support, which even in 1940 must have been of minimal practical benefit.⁸⁴ At various times, questions have been raised about whether states should seek reimbursement from adult children for public benefits paid to their parents.

The history of California's filial support laws demonstrates the tension over whether support of older adults should primarily be a public or private obligation, and whether any private obligation should include other family members. California's filial support laws date back to 1872, with the surviving obligation now set forth in the California Family Code at § 4400.⁸⁵ In County of San Mateo v. Boss, decided in 1971, the Supreme Court of California relied ⁷⁸ National Assistance Act, 1948, 11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 29, preamble (Eng.) (repealing filial support and other provisions) (available at <http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ukpga/Geo6/11-12/29/introduction>).

⁷⁹ Corning, Peter A., Report: The Evolution of Medicare, from Idea to Law Chapter 2 (Social Security Administration's Office of Research and Statistics, 1969) available at <http://www.ssa.gov/history/corningchap2.html>.

⁸⁰ Corning, Peter A., Report: The Evolution of Medicare, from Idea to Law Chapter 4 (Social Security Administration's Office of Research and Statistics, 1969) available at <http://www.ssa.gov/history/corningchap4.html>.

⁸¹ Corning, Peter A., Report: The Evolution of Medicare, from Idea to Law Chapter 5 (Social Security Administration's Office of Research and Statistics, 1969) available at <http://www.ssa.gov/history/corningchap5.html>.

⁸² See generally, Gordon L. Clark, Alicia H. Munnell, & J. Michael Orszag, "Pension and Retirement Income in a Global Environment," in THE OXFORD HANDBOOK OF PENSIONS AND RETIREMENT INCOME 10-27 (eds. Gordon L. Clark, Alicia H. Munnell, J. Michael Orszag, 2006).

⁸³ Commonwealth v. Auman, 39 Pa. D & C 448, 1941 WL 2705 (Pa. Municipal Court, 1940).

⁸⁴ Id.

⁸⁵ Cal. Fam. Code § 4400 (West 2004).

on a constitutional theory of equal protection.⁸⁶ The court held that where a sixty-six year old woman, living in her own home, was unable to work and was receiving public “old age” benefits each month, her son was not obligated to reimburse the state, despite working and earning adequate wages as a mechanic to contribute $20 per month for her support, and with no other dependents.⁸⁷ The court concluded that it was “clear a person can qualify to receive aid to the aged and yet not be so destitute that his children will owe him a duty of support” under the California statute.⁸⁸

Following the 1971 California Supreme Court decision, the California legislature amended its filial support statute to provide more clearly that all adult children of persons receiving aid to the aged would have a duty of support for their parent, thereby obligating adult children to reimburse the state for public benefits paid to their parent.⁸⁹ The revision provided a reciprocal duty to support “needy” parents or children, instead of only those deemed “poor.”⁹⁰ The California Supreme Court then concluded, in Swoap v. Superior Court of Sacramento County decided in 1973, that the revised statute provided a rational, enforceable basis for California to require adult children to reimburse the state for aid granted to their parents.⁹¹ In so ruling, the court reversed its own decision in Boss, noting that it was “not unmindful that these provisions may involve harsh results in certain instances and we are indeed sympathetic with the plight of such persons,” but the “amelioration of any harsh results” was left to the state’s administrative authorities.⁹²

In light of the above history and the fact that the filial support law, Section 4400, remains on California’s law books, one would expect that research in California would reveal cases where either parents or the state were seeking to enforce California’s filial support rules against adult children. However, in 1975, the California legislature acted again, amending its welfare code at Cal. Wel. & Inst. Code § 12350 to provide that notwithstanding filial support or other family-member support provisions in California law, relatives could not be held liable to support the needy parent or reimburse the state if the parent or other family member was applying for or receiving welfare aid.⁹³ The effect of this history was to undercut the role of filial support laws. There was no need for the needy parent to sue an unwilling child for support because that same needy parent would probably qualify for public funding. If the parent qualified for public funding, the state was barred from seeking reimbursement from the child.⁹⁴ Thus, California’s filial support law continues to be on the books, but currently has limited practical utility at least ⁸⁶ County of San Mateo v. Boss, 479 P.2d 654, 659 (Cal. 1971).

⁸⁷ County of San Mateo v. Boss, 479 P.2d 654, 659 (Cal. 1971).

⁸⁸ County of San Mateo v. Boss, 479 P.2d 654, 659 (Cal. 1971).

⁸⁹ Cal. Fam. Code § 4400 (West 2004).

⁹⁰ Cal. Fam. Code § 4400 (West 2004).

⁹¹ Swoap v. Superior Court, 516 P.2d 840, 852 (Cal. 1973).

⁹² Swoap v. Superior Court, 516 P.2d 840, 852 (Cal. 1973).

⁹³ Cal. Welf. & Inst. Code §12350 (West 2001).

⁹⁴ Cal. Welf. & Inst. Code §12350 (West 2001).

in situations where the elder is eligible to receive public aid.⁹⁵ Research reveals no appellate cases addressing enforcement of California's filial support law since 1975.

Medicaid, the joint state-federal program "designed to pay for the medical expenses of low income individuals who are aged, blind or disabled"⁹⁶ was added as a component of the overall Social Security structure. In the mid-1960s, it became the statutory policy of the federal government that states cannot consider an adult child's resources in determining the "eligibility" of the parent for Medicaid.⁹⁷ Further, for a period of time, federal administrative policy directed that states could not require the children of aged Medicaid recipients to "reimburse" either the federal or state governments for the costs of those services.⁹⁸ Many states, including California as described above, repealed or limited their filial support laws because of the federal policies, and even when the federal restriction reportedly changed in 1983 to permit reimbursement claims,⁹⁹ there has been little appetite in most states' welfare agencies to tie Medicaid to filial support from reluctant children.¹⁰⁰ Virginia's filial support law expressly permits the state to seek Medicaid reimbursement from adult children to the extent permitted by federal law, but there are no modern cases suggesting that reimbursement has been pursued by state authorities.¹⁰¹

Significantly, Medicaid "foots the bill for almost half of the paid long-term care provided in the United States."¹⁰² However, arguments over how to control or cut such public expenditures are growing louder in the United States. For example, in 2006, Congress enacted a Deficit Reduction Act, Public Law No. 109-171, with increased penalties on individuals who transfer assets for less than fair market value before applying for Medicaid, as well as other limitations

⁹⁵ George F. Indest, Legal Aspects of HCFA's Decision to Allow Recovery from Children for Medicaid Benefits Delivered to their Parents through State Financial Responsibility Statutes: A Case of Bad Rule Making Through Failure to Comply with the Administrative Procedure Act, 15 SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY LAW REVIEW 225, 236 (Fall, 1998).

⁹⁶ Lawrence A. Frolik & Richard Kaplan, ELDER LAW IN A NUTSHELL 110 (5th Ed. 2010).

⁹⁷ 42 U.S.C. § 1396A(a)(17)(D) and 42 C.F.R. § 435.602(a)(1). See also 42 U.S.C. §§ 1395i-3 and 1396r(c) (prohibiting Medicare/Medicaid certified nursing homes from requiring third-party guarantees of payment as condition of admission).

⁹⁸ George F. Indest, Legal Aspects of HCFA's Decision to Allow Recovery from Children for Medicaid Benefits Delivered to their Parents through State Financial Responsibility Statutes: A Case of Bad Rule Making Through Failure to Comply with the Administrative Procedure Act, 15 SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY LAW REVIEW 225, 226-27 (Fall, 1998)

⁹⁹ See discussion of reasons for New York's 1966 elimination of "filial obligation to indigent parents" in order to participate in "the Federal Medicare program," in State Welfare Commission v. Mintz, 280 N.Y.S. 2d 1007, 1009-10 (N.Y. App. Div. 1967). See also George F. Indest, Legal Aspects of HCFA's Decision to Allow Recovery from Children for Medicaid Benefits Delivered to their Parents through State Financial Responsibility Statutes: A Case of Bad Rule Making Through Failure to Comply with the Administrative Procedure Act, 15 SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY LAW REVIEW 225, 302 (Fall, 1998)

¹⁰⁰ See e.g. Pennsylvania law, providing that while determination of an adult's eligibility for Medicaid (Medical Assistance) can take into account, as appropriate, the resources of a spouse, "financial responsibility" of other family members cannot be considered. 62 P.S. §447(a).

¹⁰¹ Renae Reed Patrick, Honor Thy Father and Mother: Paying the Medical Bills of Elderly Parents, 19 UNIVERSITY OF RICHMOND LAW REVIEW 69, 82-83 (1984) (referencing VA. CODE ANN. § 20-88 (2008 & Supp. 2010)).

¹⁰² Marshall B. Kapp, LEGAL ASPECTS OF ELDER CARE 221 (Jones & Barlett Publishers, 2010).

on eligibility for long-term care benefits.¹⁰³ With the financial crisis that began in 2008, the pressure on the states to cut public funding for old-age care is ever increasing. With the pressure to cut public funding in the U.S., filial support laws have generated renewed interest on at least a theoretical or academic level.¹⁰⁴

V. Enforcement of Pennsylvania's Filial Support Law and Claims by Third-Parties for Care Costs

As documented on the Table and discussed above, research suggests that during the last fifty years the surviving filial support statutes have been used infrequently in most U.S. states against adult children. In one state, Pennsylvania, the modern trend has been quite different.¹⁰⁵

The key language in Pennsylvania's family support statute provides that "all of the following individuals have the responsibility to care for and maintain or financially assist an indigent person, regardless of whether the indigent person is a public charge: (i) the spouse of the indigent person. (ii) A child of the indigent person. (iii) A parent of the indigent person."¹⁰⁶ Spousal and parental obligations in this section overlap obligations contained elsewhere in the Pennsylvania domestic relations code that cover obligations to provide spousal support and parental support of children.¹⁰⁷ Therefore, as with the more narrowly focused statute in Virginia discussed above, the key language of the Pennsylvania law is the filial support language, obligating the child of the indigent person.¹⁰⁸ Pennsylvania's statute expressly permits suit to be filed by "the indigent

¹⁰³ Deficit Reduction Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-171, 120 Stat. 4.

¹⁰⁴ Lynda Yamamoto, Overcrowded Prisons and Filial Responsibility: Will States Utilize "Support of the Indigent" Statutes to Solve the Baby Boomer and Prison Crises? 41 RUTGERS L. J. 435 (2009) (reaching a unique conclusion, that enforcement of filial support laws is necessary to prevent the overcrowding of prisons with geriatric, impoverished prisoners); Andrea Rickles-Jordan, Filial Responsibility: A Survey Across Time and Oceans 9 MARQ. ELDER'S ADVISOR 183 (2007) (urging enforcement of filial support laws to help impoverished seniors, while citing support for the concept in the tradition of Judaism, Christianity, Muslims, Roman Law and English law); Matthew Pakula, A Federal Filial Responsibility Statute: A Uniform Tool to Help Combat the Wave of Indigent Elderly, 39 FAMILY LAW QUARTERLY 859, 876-77 (Fall 2005) (urging a consistent, national policy).

¹⁰⁵ Katherine C. Pearson, Filial Support Obligations in Pennsylvania: Adult Children, Parents, and Spouses, Chapter 14a in ELDER LAW IN PENNSYLVANIA (Jeffrey A. Marshall ed., PBI Press, 3d ed. 2011); Katherine C. Pearson, Rethinking Filial Support Laws in a Time of Medicaid Cutbacks, 76 PENNSYLVANIA BAR QUARTERLY 162, 165-70 (2005).

¹⁰⁶ 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4603 (West 2010).

¹⁰⁷ 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4321 (West 2010).

¹⁰⁸ 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4603 (West 2010). The plain language of Pennsylvania's statute makes the care and financial assistance obligation reciprocal, running to "indigent" parents or "indigent" children, without limitation on age. See e.g., Verna v. Verna 432 A.2d 630 (Pa. Super. 1981) (holding father liable to pay medical expenses for his adult daughter under 62 P.S. §1973, the predecessor statute to Section 4603 in the domestic relations code). One line of cases in Pennsylvania holds that parents are not obligated to support their children after emancipation if the child was not disabled as date of emancipation. See e.g., Style v. Shaub, 955 A.2d 403 (Pa. Super. 2008) (holding that where child's psychiatric and medical disabilities existed before he reached the age of majority, the parent's support obligation continues, and describing emancipation as creating a presumption of non-entitlement to support that can be rebutted only if there is evidence of disability before reaching the age of majority). In recent years, such rulings have ignored the reciprocal parent/child language of Section 4603. See Shaffer-Doan v. Department of Public Welfare, 960 A.2d 500, 513 n. 25 (Pa. Super. 2008) (noting the apparent inconsistency between the ruling in Style and Section 4603's filial responsibility obligation).

person” or by “any other person or public body or public agency having any interest in the care, maintenance or assistance of such indigent person.”¹⁰⁹

Despite structural changes, Pennsylvania’s filial support language setting forth the obligation of the child (interpreted practically, as the “adult” child) remained largely intact since first enacted.¹¹⁰ Between 1937 and 2005, Pennsylvania’s filial support provisions were part of its public welfare laws.¹¹¹ For a period of time, the viability of the filial support language was masked by the use of “repealed” in an explanatory paragraph attached to the statute in 1976.¹¹² In 2005, the statute was modified slightly by the state legislature and moved to the domestic relations code.¹¹³

The modern era for filial support enforcement in Pennsylvania arguably began in 1994 with the case of Savoy v. Savoy, where an adult son was sued by his divorced mother.¹¹⁴ The mother had a series of health problems, including surgery on her neck and a fall that resulted in a broken ankle.¹¹⁵ She had received a lump sum worker’s compensation benefit and she had monthly income of $438 (USD) in the form of social security benefits.¹¹⁶ However, she also had unpaid medical expenses in excess of $10,000 (USD).¹¹⁷ Her son was a part-owner and manager of a family-owned furniture manufacturing business and had no dependents.¹¹⁸ According to evidence presented at trial, the son had $2,327 (USD) in monthly income but also reported monthly expenses of $2,583 (USD).¹¹⁹ He implicitly argued that under the language of Pennsylvania’s law he could not be liable to financially assist his mother because he did not have “sufficient financial ability.”¹²⁰ The court rejected this argument and concluded that even though ¹¹⁰ See e.g., 1937 Pa. Laws 2045 (partially repealed 1985, fully repealed 2005), when the substantive law was moved from the welfare laws to the Domestic Relations Code, at 23 Pa. Cons Stat. Ann. § 4603 (West. 2010).

¹⁰⁹ 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4603(c) (West 2010).

¹¹¹ 62 P.S. §§ 1971-1976 can be traced further to the Colonial Laws of Pennsylvania 1705-6, ch. CLIV, § II, at 251-53.

¹¹² See discussion in Savoy v. Savoy, 641 S.2d 596, 597-98 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹¹³ The transfer of the statute, accomplished by repealing the original text at 62 P.S. §§ 1971-1976, and enacting 23 Pa. Con Stat. Ann. §§ 4601-4606, was described as being part of a long-range effort to “codify” old laws that existed in an unofficial compilation, known as Laws of Pennsylvania. However, the timing of the legislative action proved to be controversial, as discussed by the author elsewhere. See Katherine C. Pearson, Rethinking Filial Support Laws in a Time of Medicaid Cutbacks, 76 PENNSYLVANIA BAR QUARTERLY 162, 165-70 (2005). See also, Katherine C. Pearson, Filial Support Obligations in Pennsylvania: Adult Children, Parents, and Spouses, Chapter 14a in ELDER LAW IN PENNSYLVANIA (Jeffrey A. Marshall ed., PBI Press, 3d ed. 2011).

¹¹⁴ 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4603(c) (West 2010).

¹¹⁵ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994). Other potentially important decisions involving adult children and parents were issued by the Superior Court in 1955, 1968 and 1981, but the precedential value of those rulings for adult children’s liability for support of a parent was unclear in light of the “repealed” label applied to the statute in 1976. See Commonwealth ex rel. Home for the Jewish Aged v. Kotzker, 118 A.2d 271 (Pa. super. 1955) (holding adult child liable); Albert Einstein Med. Ctr. v. Forman, 243 A.2d 181 (Pa. Super. 1968) (holding adult child liable); and Verna v. Verna, 432 A.2d 630 (Pa. Super. 1981) (holding parent liable to adult child for support).

¹¹⁶ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹¹⁷ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹¹⁸ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹¹⁹ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹²⁰ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 600 (Pa. Super. 1994).

the mother had some monthly income, she was “indigent” for purposes of the filial support statute because her “reasonable living expenses” exceeded her monthly income.¹²¹ The appellate court affirmed the trial court’s order that the son must pay $125 (USD) per month towards his mother’s past medical care expenses.¹²² The court rejected the son’s final argument that the statute in question had been repealed through two decades of changes in the overall welfare law.¹²³

The 1994 Savoy case can be seen as a turning point for two reasons. First, it was a modern era case permitting the parent to sue the adult child directly for support and concluding that liability could not be avoided by a superficial demonstration that the child’s expenses exceeded his income.¹²⁴ Second, even though the parent sued the child, seeking a “parental support order,” the court ordered the son to pay the mother’s past health care providers, not the mother.¹²⁵ The mother was the plaintiff; the hospital was to be the actual recipient of the award.¹²⁶

The next case was Presbyterian Medical Center v. Budd decided in 2003.¹²⁷ In this case a nursing home sued the daughter of a resident on several theories, including the filial support law, breach of contract, fraud, and equitable theories such as restitution.¹²⁸ The nursing home alleged that at the time of the mother’s death there was an outstanding balance of $96,000 (USD).¹²⁹ The nursing home claimed that the daughter had promised to apply for Medicaid to pay for the long-term care for her mother, but instead she used a power of attorney to transfer more than $100,000 (USD) from her mother’s bank accounts to herself.¹³⁰ The Court of Appeals was asked to decide whether any of the theories alleged by the nursing home could be used to recover the unpaid care costs from the daughter.¹³¹ The court found that technical reasons defeated all but one of the nursing home’s claims.¹³² On the filial support claim, the appellate

¹²¹ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 599-600 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹²² Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹²³ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 599 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹²⁴ Pennsylvania’s law is reciprocal, permitting either the child or the parent, if indigent, to seek support. 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4603 (West 2010). In deciding the adult son’s liability for his mother’s medical expenses in Savoy, the Superior Court viewed its holding in Verna v. Verna, 432 A.2d 630 (Pa. Super. 1981), holding a father obligated to contribute $50 per month towards his emancipated daughter’s uninsured medical expenses, as precedent. Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994). In the thirteen year interval between the two cases, there were changes in the Public Welfare Code that raised a question as to whether the filial support language had been repealed or limited; however, these arguments were rejected by the Superior Court in the Savoy decision. Id.

¹²⁵ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596, 598 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹²⁶ The outcome arguably was unsatisfactory to all concerned in Savoy v. Savoy. If the mother’s primary financial concern was the back debt, her most direct relief might have been bankruptcy; obligating the reluctant son to make the payment on the back debt for many months into the future most likely ensured that he would not reunite and care for his mother; the hospital would probably have preferred to make its own arrangements for payment of the back debt.

¹²⁷ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹²⁸ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1069 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹²⁹ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1069 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹³⁰ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1069 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹³¹ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1069 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹³² Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1069 (Pa. Super. 2003).

court ruled that the nursing home could use the filial support law as a means of recovering its costs of caring for the “indigent” mother from the daughter.¹³³

The 2003 Budd case was important because it confirmed that a company could make a direct claim against an adult child for filial support as a “person . . . having interest in the care, maintenance or assistance” of the parent.¹³⁴ The case was also important because the court commented on the fault of the daughter in making her mother indigent.¹³⁵ However, by permitting the case to go forward on the filial support law, the court was authorizing a potential recovery without requiring the claimant to prove fraud, breach of contract, or other fault as the basis of the child’s liability.¹³⁶

In 2005, two years after the decision in Budd, the Pennsylvania legislature moved the filial support law from the public welfare code to the domestic relations code, a move that further raised the visibility of the law.¹³⁷ The Governor described the action as “[updating] provisions requiring that immediate family members contribute to the cost of care, thus decreasing the burden on the Medical Assistance program, when possible.”¹³⁸ Nursing homes and other long-term care facilities began using the law to sue relatives of residents with greater frequency. The author’s 2008 search on Westlaw, Lexis, and in three county courthouse electronic databases identified fifteen pending lawsuits filed by third-parties such as nursing homes against adult children or spouses for costs of care provided to older adults, citing Pennsylvania’s filial support law as one of the alternative grounds for liability.¹³⁹

¹³³ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1075 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹³⁴ 23 PA. CONS STAT. ANN. § 4603 (West 2010).

¹³⁵ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1076 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹³⁶ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1077 (Pa. Super. 2003). In the Budd case, the daughter was alleged to have had direct contact with her mother’s nursing home, falsely assuring the facility she was making an application for Medicaid on her mother’s behalf. Id. at 110. Past cases permitting the use of filial support claims against an adult child by third-party claimants had relied on the doctrine of assumpsit, an implied contract theory, to permit retroactive recovery for pre-suit support. Albert Einstein Med. Ctr. v. Forman, 243 A.2d 181, 183-184 (Pa. Super. 1968). See also Katherine C. Pearson, Filial Support Obligations in Pennsylvania: Adult Children, Parents, and Spouses, in ELDER LAW IN PENNSYLVANIA 974-977 (Jeffrey A. Marshall ed., PBI Press, 3d ed. 2011) (urging caution in understanding the rulings of Budd and similar cases to permit “retroactive” awards, especially in the absence of “fault” or misleading conduct on the part of the adult child in dealing with the parent’s nursing home).

¹³⁷ Katherine C. Pearson, Rethinking Filial Support Laws in a Time of Medicaid Cutbacks, 76 PENNSYLVANIA BAR QUARTERLY 162, 165 (2005) (tracing history).

¹³⁸ Governor’s Message, July 31, 2005, PA. Gov. Mess., 7/31/2005 (available on Westlaw in the Legislative History for 23 Pa. Con Stat. Ann. § 4601). Despite the likely political popularity of this announcement, however, federal law prohibits states from taking “into account the financial responsibility of any individual for any applicant or recipient of assistance under the [state Medicaid] plan unless such applicant or recipient is such individual’s spouse or such individual’s child who is under age 21” when determining eligibility for Medicaid (also known as Medical Assistance in Pennsylvania). See 42 U.S.C. §1396A(a)(17)(D). See also 42 C.F.R. § 435.602(a)(1)(2003) and 62 P.S. § 447(a), a Pennsylvania administrative code provision providing that “Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no repayment shall be required of any medical assistance paid in behalf of any person who which he was eligible; and, with respect to the determination of eligibility for such assistance, no relative . . . shall be required to contribute to the cost of the care for which such assistance is provided.”

¹³⁹ Katherine C. Pearson & Trisha A. Cowart, THE LAW OF FINANCIAL ABUSE AND EXPLOITATION 152-54 nn. 21-23 (Bisel Co., 2011).

The post-2005 spotlight on the law led to members of the Pennsylvania Bar Association to unite in opposition to the emerging pattern of enforcement practices, with the Bar Association calling for repeal of Pennsylvania's filial support language.¹⁴⁰ A bill was introduced by legislators in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives for the 2011-2012 Legislative Session and is still pending as of June 2012; if passed without changes the bill would repeal the filial support provision.¹⁴¹

The Pennsylvania cases filed against children also began attracting media attention about the use of the filial support law as a collection tool. In an ABC News report, a 39-year old Pennsylvania woman was described as "stunned" to learn that a nursing home was suing her for more than $300,000 (USD) in unpaid bills relating to her father and mother. The suit was eventually settled.¹⁴² In commenting on such suits, a national spokesperson for the long-term care industry implied that tightened reimbursement rules for Medicaid were squeezing nursing homes and thus requiring them to pursue all available options to cover expenses.¹⁴³ In the same news story, an attorney who represented Pennsylvania nursing homes explained that he used Pennsylvania's filial support laws to persuade adult children to do the paperwork necessary to establish Medicaid eligibility for their parents.¹⁴⁴ This and other news articles suggest that even in Pennsylvania there is little public awareness or understanding of filial support laws, a fact that can lead to seemingly harsh or surprising results. In January 2009, AARP published a nationally scoped article, concluding that "few people are aware that filial support laws exist."¹⁴⁵

A fairly dramatic example of the modern trend was the May 2012 decision by Pennsylvania's Superior Court in Health Care & Retirement Corp. of America (HCR) v. Pittas.¹⁴⁶ In the case, an adult son was held liable for his mother's outstanding debt for approximately six months of ¹⁴⁰ See Recommendation and Report to the Pennsylvania Bar Association calling for repeals of Sections 4603 and 4606 of Title 23 of the Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes Annotated (also known as Act 43) (copy on file with the author), approved by the Pennsylvania Bar Association, as documented in the Bill Status Report for the Pennsylvania Bar Association at http://www.pabar.org/public/legislative/Boxscore/bar_box.htm (last visited June 4, 2012).

¹⁴¹ Pennsylvania House Bill 321 (Printer's No. 276) introduced in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives in the Regular Session 2011-12. An earlier version of this bill, H.B. 2749 (Printer's No. 4396), was introduced in 2006 and passed the House of Representatives by a large margin (191 to 4) before being blocked in the Senate when the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare opposed the repeal. See Katherine C. Pearson, Filial Support Obligations in Pennsylvania: Adult Children, Parents, and Spouses, Chapter 14a, at pages 959-60, in ELDER LAW IN PENNSYLVANIA (Jeffrey A. Marshall ed., PBI Press, 3d ed. 2011).

¹⁴² Alice Gomstyn, Pay Your Parents' Bills or Else, ABC News (July 15, 2009), <http://abcnews.go.com/Business/story?id=8074570&page=1#.T75vIr8IY6X>.

¹⁴³ Alice Gomstyn, Pay Your Parents' Bills or Else, ABC News (July 15, 2009), <http://abcnews.go.com/Business/story?id=8074570&page=1#.T75vIr8IY6X> (referencing comments made by David Hebert, AHCA's senior vice president for policy and government affairs).

¹⁴⁴ Alice Gomstyn, Pay Your Parents' Bills or Else, ABC News (July 15, 2009), <http://abcnews.go.com/Business/story?id=8074570&page=1#.T75vIr8IY6X>.

¹⁴⁵ Beth Baker, Paying for Mom: Little Known Laws for Families to Fund Parents' Care, AARP (January, 2009), http://www.aarp.org/relationships/caregiving/info-01-2009/paying_for_mom_little_known_laws_force_families_to_fund_parents_care_.html.

¹⁴⁶ Health Care & Retirement Corp. of America v. Pittas, 2012 Pa. Super. 96, ___ A.3d ___, 2012 WL 1571830 (Pa. Super. 2012).

care in a nursing home, totaling close to $93,000.¹⁴⁷ The court accepted the son's argument on appeal that the nursing home, rather than the son, had the burden of establishing his "ability" to pay his indigent parent's expenses;¹⁴⁸ however, the court concluded the burden was satisfied by introduction of joint tax returns, bank account statements and testimony that the son's "net income was in excess of $85,000.00, and that he had recently paid-off a tax lien by making monthly payments of $1,100.00."¹⁴⁹

The Superior Court also concluded that the son's liability need not be stayed because of a pending application for Medicaid to cover the mother's nursing home expenses,¹⁵⁰ nor did the plaintiff have any obligation to join the mother's husband or other siblings in the suit as additional or alternative sources of support.¹⁵¹ The court said it was applying the plain language of the law, observing that "while sympathetic with [son's] obligation to support his mother without the assistance of this mother's husband or her other children, we note that if [the son] had desired to share his support-burden, he was permitted to do so by joining those individuals in this case."¹⁵²

The Superior Court decision in Pittas is significant because unlike the Budd case,¹⁵³ where the daughter's substantial potential liability for her mother's accrued debt was tied to evidence showing the daughter's own fault, there was no suggestion in the court opinion that the Pittas son was at fault in the accruing of the debt. Further, while the court in the Savoy case had imposed liability on the son to cover his mother's accrued debt, the dollar obligation was expressed in monthly sums of $150, to be paid over the course of future months, not as a lump sum of $10,000.¹⁵⁴ By holding the son liable for a lump sum of close to $93,000 in the Pittas case, the Superior Court appears to confirm a significant tool for certain creditors of individuals who are unable to pay their debts personally, permitting the filial support statute to be applied retroactively to substantial accrued debt, without requiring evidence of fault on the part of the targeted family member.¹⁵⁵ The award gives the nursing home potentially significant leverage in ¹⁴⁷ Id. The mother resided in the in the facility from sometime in September 2007 until March 2008 for assistance with on-going care needs following a car accident that injured herself and her husband. Id. at *1. When the mother left the facility, she relocated to Greece with the assistance of her daughter, a Greek resident, leaving a "large portion of the bills incurred . . . due and owing to HCR." Id. Not documented or addressed in the Superior Court opinion, but described in the son's brief on appeal, was a pending suit for medical malpractice in connection with the mother's care, filed by the mother and her husband against the nursing home. See Brief of Appellant, filed December 7, 2011, available at 2011 WL 7807578 at *6.

¹⁴⁸ Id., 2012 WL 1571830 at *3.

¹⁴⁹ Id., 2012 WL 1571830 at *3.

¹⁵⁰ Id. at *4.

¹⁵¹ Id.

¹⁵² Id. at *4.

¹⁵³ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹⁵⁴ Savoy v. Savoy, 641 A.2d 596 (Pa. Super. 1994).

¹⁵⁵ Health Care & Retirement Corp. of America v. Pittas, 2012 Pa. Super. 96, ___ A.3d ___, 2012 WL 1571830 (Pa. Super. 2012).

collection.¹⁵⁶ Nor does the dollar claim in Pittas appear to be unique, with, for example, trial court records demonstrating other pending cases seeking substantial sums.¹⁵⁷

Unlike the single case example from Virginia,¹⁵⁸ a decision rendered in Puerto Rico in 2008,¹⁵⁹ or the multiple, recent examples from Ukraine, where it was family members who were seeking direct support to benefit struggling parents, the cases in Pennsylvania demonstrate a growing pattern of commercial entities as plaintiffs, seeking the costs of care. The Pennsylvania cases may predict a new focus for filial support laws, one that is significant in a nation of aging baby boomers.

One other state, South Dakota, has reported similar case decisions.¹⁶⁰ In 1998 the Supreme Court of South Dakota ruled that a hospital was entitled to void a transfer of real estate by the patient/father to his adult son on the ground the transfer was a fraudulent attempt to avoid the parents' creditors.¹⁶¹ The court also ruled that the hospital could make a claim for payment against the son for the father's health care debt under that state's version of a filial support statute.¹⁶² A similar ruling in South Dakota, permitting a nursing home to collect the mother's unpaid care costs from an adult child, was issued four years earlier.¹⁶³ In that case the court ¹⁵⁶ The Superior Court decision in Pittas did not address whether "support" awards can be applied properly to compel payment of pre-complaint debts. See Commonwealth ex rel. Sharpe v. Sharpe, 163 A.2d 923 (Pa. Super. 1960) (holding that trial court's order that son pay $150 to 65 year old father for debts predating the complaint was an improper, retroactive order); Commonwealth ex rel. Price v. Campbell, 119 A.2d 816 (Pa. Super. 1956) (holding that although evidence supported award of support from son to mother, that award should not operate retroactively). But see Albert Einstein Med. Ctr. v. Forman, 243 A.2d 181 (Pa. Super. 1968) (observing that a third-party may seek future support, or, alternatively, may file an action for assumpsit, a type of implied contract claim, based on the statutory duty). In addition, for claims for "medical assistance for the aged," another question not addressed by the court in Pittas is whether a formula that appears to operate as a statutory cap on liability should have been applied. See 23 PA. CON. STAT. ANN. 4603 (b)(2) which provides that the amount of liability in any 12-month period must be the "lesser" of the actual cost, or "six times the excess of the liable individual's average monthly income over the amount required for the reasonable support of the liable individual and other persons dependent upon the liable individual." Id. An example of the potential significance of this formula: assuming the son's annual after-tax income was $90,000 ($7,500 per month), and his "reasonable" support expenses for his wife and two children were as low as $3,500 per month, that would make the son's maximum liability for a year's worth of care = $24,000 ($4,000 per month of income in excess of reasonable expenses, multiplied by 6 months), significantly less than the close to $93,000 awarded). See additional discussion of fundamental fairness issues at Katherine C. Pearson, Filial Support Obligations in Pennsylvania: Adult Children, Parents, and Spouses, in ELDER LAW IN PENNSYLVANIA 974-977 (Jeffrey A. Marshall ed., PBI Press, 3d ed. 2011).

¹⁵⁷ HCR ManorCare Huntingdon Valley v. Santore, No. 10-22179 (Pennsylvania Court of Common Pleas, Montgomery County, available on the court's document website at <http://montcourt.org>, and also available at 2010 WL 3215949) (alleging son's liability for more than $196,000).

¹⁵⁸ Peyton v. Peyton, 8 Va. Cir. 531, 531 (Va. Cir. Ct. 1978) (also available at 1978 Va. Cir. LEXIS 19).

¹⁵⁹ Discussed supra, at note ___ (currently 50). See Chavez v. Hernandez et al., Civil Núm. KAL 2005-1188, 2008 WL 5561018 (TCA), at *pg. #, (P.R. Cir. 2008).

¹⁶⁰ Prairie Lakes Health Care Sys., Inc. v. Wookey, 583 N.W.2d 405 (S.D. 1998).

¹⁶¹ Prairie Lakes Health Care Sys., Inc. v. Wookey, 583 N.W.2d 405, 417 (S.D. 1998).

¹⁶² Prairie Lakes Health Care Sys., Inc. v. Wookey, 583 N.W.2d 405, 418 (S.D. 1998) (citing S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 25-7-27 (West 2004)).

¹⁶³ Americana Healthcare Ctr. v. Randall, 513 N.W.2d 566 (S.D. 1994).

found that the son had the ability to pay the bills from funds held in a trust, money he had inherited from his mother after her death.¹⁶⁴

Decisions such as those made by the Pennsylvania Superior Court in 2003¹⁶⁵ and the South Dakota Supreme Court in 1998¹⁶⁶ are usually generated by “gaps” in Medicare or Medicaid coverage. Arguably these gaps could have been avoided with proper advice at the time of admission to the facilities. Such rulings perhaps seem fair when the record demonstrates that the targeted defendant-child (a) was responsible for helping to create the gap, (b) manipulated the parent or the facility while helping him- or herself to the parent’s funds, or (c) simply benefitted from actions that moved the parent’s assets from out of the parent’s estate and into the child’s hands without payment of the debt of the parent. The filial support cases that are more troubling, however, are those where it appears the adult child was targeted for no reason other than familial status and an unpaid, accrued debt. It is possible that harsh outcomes are simply the result of Pennsylvania’s simplistic statute, which does not define “indigency” and does not provide express factors, such as comparative equities or unclean hands of parties, as relevant to a determination of liability.¹⁶⁷ Certainly, it seems clear that the larger the accrued debt of the parent, the greater the impact on the sandwiched generation, thus signaling the importance for statutory caps or limits on retroactive enforcement. In Pennsylvania, as demonstrated by the Superior Court’s 1994 decision in Savoy and to an even greater extent in the 2012 decision in Pittas, enforcement of the plain language in surviving filial support laws can have harsh results, affecting both the individual and the larger family dynamic.

VI. Challenges for Cross-Border Enforcement of Filial Support Laws in the U.S.

As demonstrated in the attached Table and discussed in this article, only a portion of the states and territories of the U.S. have filial support laws that can be used to mandate that adult children must pay support for needy parents. In the U.S., with its large, highly mobile national population, a key development favoring enforcement of child support and spousal support was the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, also known as UIFSA.¹⁶⁸ Further, for child support matters there is a growing, national system for interstate enforcement of state court rulings, mandated by specific federal law, including the Full Faith and Credit for Child Support Orders Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1738B.¹⁶⁹ However, the network may not apply to filial support laws when used against adult children. Parties seeking interstate enforcement of state judgments against adult children would instead need to argue enforcement under the general Full Faith and Credit

¹⁶⁴ Americana Healthcare Ctr. v. Randall, 513 N.W.2d 566, 571 (S.D. 1994).

¹⁶⁵ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹⁶⁶ Prairie Lakes Health Care Sys., Inc. v. Wookey, 583 N.W.2d 405 (S.D. 1998).

¹⁶⁷ See e.g., Cal. Fam. Code §4404 (West 2004); P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 8 §712(f) (2009), (available at <http://www.lexisnexis.com.ar>) (2009).

¹⁶⁸ Unif. Interstate Family Support Act, 9 Pt. IB U.L.A. 469 (1992); 9 Pt. IB U.L.A. 281 (1996); 9 Pt. IB 159 (2001); 9 Pt. IB 72 (Supp. 2008).

¹⁶⁹ 28 U.S.C. § 1738B (2001).

language of federal law, including the Full Faith and Credit Act at 28 U.S.C. §1738, and Article IV, Section 1 of the United States Constitution.¹⁷⁰

Further, states that have repealed or rejected filial support laws in their own states, have also ruled that out-of-state laws are unenforceable against adult children living within their borders. In State Welfare Commissioner v. Mintz, a New York court concluded that a Connecticut award of support for the indigent parent residing in Connecticut could not be enforced against the adult child living in New York because New York had repealed its filial support law in 1966.¹⁷¹ Similarly, In Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Mong, the Ohio Supreme Court refused to permit a Pennsylvania order compelling a son to support his father to be enforced in Ohio, recognizing a defense based on abandonment that was available under Ohio but not Pennsylvania law.¹⁷² Such rulings have not been tested under the Full Faith and Credit provisions of federal law.

Such cases show the potential impact of a lack of national consensus in the United States about enforcement of filial support laws, a problem that does not exist in a smaller country with a single national law, such as Ukraine. In the U.S., prior to changes in child support enforcement laws, the fact that parents who were determined to evade child support orders would cross state lines to avoid or delay enforcement, motivated law reformers to sanction “deadbeat” obligors nationally.¹⁷³ In the U.S. there is no similar national consensus about enforcement of support orders for indigent parents against adult children.

VII. Conclusion

An uneven U.S. history of using filial support laws to compel adult children to provide financial support for their needy parents may represent conflicting -- or changing -- views over how to allocate public and private responsibility for helping the poor. In the U.S. and Ukraine the language of the filial support statutes is similar, expressing a broad duty that many people would agree with on a moral basis, that children should support and assist their needy parents. The difference is in the willingness to use the statutes to mandate support against reluctant children.

The differing current enforcement practices may in part reflect the difference in governance and economic pressures. Ukraine was a core economic component of the Soviet Union, until it delivered the final nail in the coffin of the communist empire in December 1991, with close to 90% of the Ukrainian population voting for independence.¹⁷⁴ The country has both modernized ¹⁷⁰ Russell J. Weintraub, COMMENTARY ON THE CONFLICT OF LAWS 363-67 (Foundation Press, 6th Ed. 2010) (citing U.S. CONST. art. IV, § 1. and Full Faith and Credit Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1738 (2003)).

¹⁷¹ State Welfare Commission v. Mintz, 280 N.Y.S. 2d 1007, 1010 (N.Y. App. Div. 1967)

¹⁷² Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Mong, 117 N.E.2d 32, 34 (Ohio 1954)

¹⁷³ Russell J. Weintraub, COMMENTARY ON THE CONFLICT OF LAWS 365 (Foundation Press, 6th Ed. 2010)

¹⁷⁴ Excellent English-language histories of Ukraine are available, including Anna Reid, BORDERLAND: A JOURNEY THROUGH THE HISTORY OF UKRAINE 224 (Westview Press, 2000) and Orest Subtelny, UKRAINE: A HISTORY 583 (Univ. of Toronto, 4th ed., 2009).

and struggled with its emerging economy, weighed down by the legacy of the Chernobyl nuclear plant meltdown in 1986.¹⁷⁵ Internal challenges for political control, including the so-called Orange Revolution in 2004, have continued, sometimes accompanied by allegations of fraud and corruption.¹⁷⁶ The world-wide economic collapse of financial markets that began in 2008 hit the country hard, making it difficult for public welfare programs to provide an adequate safety net for the poor.¹⁷⁷ Ukraine's current willingness to enforce filial support laws against adult children may be a modern day echo of the Elizabethan-era Poor Laws, policies which were abandoned by England in the mid-twentieth century with the rise of its Welfare State.

Comparison of recent enforcement practices among the U.S. states and Ukraine reveals at least five approaches:

- Systematic enforcement of filial support in the form of predictable (and usually modest) monthly sums, used to relieve what appears to be fundamental poverty, usually triggered by direct requests for support made by the indigent elder or caregiving individuals (usually other family members), as demonstrated by the recent Ukrainian cases.
- Episodic enforcement of filial support laws, targeting adult children who have benefited from self-directed transfers of family resources that could have been used to pay health care or long-term care providers, with the claimants being third-party, commercial care-givers, such as hospitals or nursing homes, as demonstrated by the cases in South Dakota¹⁷⁸ and the Budd case¹⁷⁹ in Pennsylvania.
- Episodic enforcement of filial support laws of filial support laws, without regard to the defendant-child's fault or lack thereof, used by commercial entities as debt collection tools, as demonstrated by the post-2005 reports of suits filed in Pennsylvania, including the decision in the Pittas case.¹⁸⁰
- No significant attempts at enforcement, either on the part of needy elders, family members or commercial third-parties, as demonstrated by research in the states of Alaska, California, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, ¹⁷⁵ Orest Subtelny, UKRAINE: A HISTORY 619 (Univ. of Toronto, 4th ed., 2009).

¹⁷⁶ Id., at 636-39 (discussing the political climate and the Ukrainian presidential election of 2004).

¹⁷⁷ One estimate of poverty concludes that as of 2009, 35% of Ukraine's population was below the poverty line. 2012 CIA World Factbook, for Ukraine, available at http://www.theodora.com/wfbcurent/ukraine/ukraine_economy.html (last visited June 3, 2012).

¹⁷⁸ Prairie Lakes Health Care Sys., Inc. v. Wookey, 583 N.W.2d 405 (S.D. 1998); Americana Healthcare Ctr. v. Randall, 513 N.W.2d 566 (S.D. 1994).

¹⁷⁹ Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd, 832 A.2d 1066, 1076 (Pa. Super. 2003).

¹⁸⁰ Health Care & Retirement Corp. of America v. Pittas, 2012 Pa. Super. 96, ___ A.3d ___, 2012 WL 1571830 (Pa. Super. 2012).

Mississippi, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oregon, and Rhode Island.

- Formal rejection of filial support policies, as evidenced by the repeal of statutory law, occurring in Idaho in 2011.

There may be a sixth approach, although it is one more difficult to document in this article with objective research. The author served as the director of the Elder Protection Clinic at Pennsylvania State University's Dickinson School of Law from 2001 to 2012, in which law students working as certified legal interns represented older adults on a wide range of legal matters. A number of the matters arose from financial abuse or exploitation, sometimes at the hands of adult children, usually involving the parent's home transferred in exchange for an unfulfilled promise of care. One of the tools used by the Clinic to combat financial abuse of an elderly parent by an adult child was to present the child with the option: pay monthly support for the remainder of the impoverished elder's life as required by Pennsylvania's filial support law, or return the house.¹⁸¹

It seems reasonable to conclude that when a nation is both willing and financially able to provide adequate public support to assist poor elders, filial support laws are less important and less frequently used. In the United States, when the federal government was willing to fully fund Medicare and Medicaid for elders' health care and long-term care in nursing homes, federal policies led states to repeal or limit the use of filial support laws to mandate financial support for parents by their adult children. However, as the large demographic cohort of baby boomers ages, thus increasing the likelihood of costly health care and long-term care, there may be heightened interest among the U.S. states in using filial support laws against adult children.

In Ukraine, research of cases decided from 2004 forward demonstrates that filial support laws are used in a direct manner to mandate that adult children share their income with their needy parents. Some of the cases demonstrate that application of the law against a brother or sister may also serve to relieve disproportionate financial burdens voluntarily assumed by one child, often the child who is physically or emotionally closer to the parent. On the other hand, while the proportion of the child's income allocated to support of parents by court orders may be significant and thus may be seen by the adult child as a harsh burden, the total amounts of money awarded is fairly low. Are the sums enough to relieve economic hardship for the parent without creating economic hardship for the adult child? The opportunity for the author of this article to comment on Ukrainian law is narrow and is based on limited research. Nonetheless, two potential concerns emerge from the Ukrainian research: whether the dollar benefit of enforcement of filial support laws ever outweighs the enforcement costs, and whether policy-makers adequately consider the potential impact of enforcement on the larger family dynamic.

¹⁸¹ The Clinic experiences are documented in the author's book, co-written with Trisha Cowart. See Katherine C. Pearson & Trisha A. Cowart, THE LAW OF FINANCIAL ABUSE AND EXPLOITATION (Bisel Publ. Co. 2011), with Chapter 6 covering the use of filial support laws in Pennsylvania.

These same concerns may exist for any U.S. state tempted to commit to modern-era enforcement of filial support laws.

In the United States, filial support laws have not been used frequently in recent years to require adult children to provide direct financial assistance to needy parents. However, as demonstrated by the recent history of decisions and cases filed in Pennsylvania and South Dakota, where third-party claims for support of parents are permitted, the sums of money involved can be very large. The facts of these cases sometimes demonstrate fraud, manipulation, or other fault on the part of the adult child, and as one commentator observes, “enforcement . . . may be appropriate in egregious individual situations,”¹⁸² but in most states filial support laws do not require proof of such fault. Are filial support laws being used to avoid proof requirements for fraud or other-fault based theories of recovery? And what does that mean for “innocent” defendant-family members who are sued for huge arrearages in long-term care or health costs? In the U.S., filial support statutes are not currently tied to “fault” grounds and thus comparatively “innocent,” if estranged, adult children could become subject to claims for substantial care costs for their parents.

Significantly, in the United States, filial support laws are not well known or understood by the general public in the 21st Century. The inconsistency in the laws among the U.S. states, the episodic nature of enforcement during the last fifty years, and the evidence of a new trend of third-party enforcement of filial support laws by debt collectors, raise important concerns, including the question of whether filial support laws are serving appropriate public policy goals in the United States.

¹⁸² Seymour Moskowitz, Filial Responsibility Statutes: Legal and Policy Considerations, 9 JOURNAL OF LAW AND POLICY 709, 731 (2001).

TABLE

FILIAL SUPPORT STATUTES in the UNITED STATES

Updated June 7, 2012

STATE	STATUTE	MOST RECENT CASES RELEVANT TO ISSUE OF ADULT CHILD'S LIABILITY FOR SUPPORT OF PARENT
Alabama	No Current Statute
Alaska	Alaska Stat. § 25.20.030 (Duty of parent & child when poor) Alaska Stat. § 47.25.230 (Persons liable for support and burial) Alaska Stat. § 11.51.210 (Crime)
Arizona	No Current Statute
Arkansas	Ark. Code Ann. § 20-47-106 (Duty limited to mental health services)	Alcorn v Ark. State Hospital , 367 S.W.2d 737 (Ark. Supreme 1963) (decided under prior law, discussing limits on secondary liability of family member (father) for costs of mental health care to family member (adult daughter) in state hospital) Stewart v. Stewart , 1990 WL 48886 (Ark. App. 1990) (dicta, discussing parents' financial liability for mentally disabled adult son)
California	Cal. Fam. Code 4400-4405 (Duty to Support Parents) Cal. Fam. Code 4410-4414 (Relief from Duty to Support Parents) Cal. Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 12350 & 12351 (Including Releases of Obligation to Reimburse State) Cal. Penal Code § 270(c) (Crime)	Swoap v. Superior Ct. of Sacramento Co. , 516 P.2d 840 (Cal. 1973) (decided under prior version of statute, holding statutory duty of children to support needy parents and reimburse state for support is constitutional and does not deny equal protection of laws) People v. Heizman , 886 P.2d 1229 (Cal. 1994) (discussing filial duties in context of criminal case of elder abuse filed against adult daughter)
Colorado	No Current Statute	In re Marriage of Sendinsky , 740 P.2d 521 (Colo. 1987) (discussing impact of voluntary contributions by adult children to mother in divorce)
Connecticut	Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 53-304 (Crime, for refusing reasonable necessary support to parent under age 65)
Delaware	Del. Code Ann. Tit. 13 § 503 (Duty to support poor person includes spouse, parents & children). Del. Code Ann. Tit. 13 § 506 (Just cause defense to failure to support)	Dutton v. Wolhar , 809 F. Supp. 1130 (D. Del. 1992) (holding debt collectors not entitled to misrepresent effect of statute in attempting to collect deceased parents' debts from adult children)
Florida	No Current Statute
Georgia	GA. Code Ann. § 36-12-3 (Children of full age shall support paupers)	Davenport v. Davenport , 111 S.E. 2d 57 (Ga. 1959) (declining to permit wife/mother to seek both spousal support and support from children)
Hawaii	No Current Statute
Idaho	No Current Statute	Idaho Code § 32-1002 was repealed effective July 1, 2011
Illinois	No Current Statute
Indiana	Ind. Code Ann. §§ 31-16-17-1 thru 7 (Liability of children for support of parents & contribute to burials) Ind. Code Ann. § 35-46-1-7 (Crime)	Pickett v. Pickett , 251 N.E.2d 684 (Ind. App. 1969) (upholding obligation of son to support mother under prior version of statute) Davis v. State , 240 N.E.2d 54 (Ind. 1968) (holding son's gainful employment did not mean son was able to support mother under prior version of statute)
Iowa	Iowa Code Ann. § 252.1 (Defining "poor" person) Iowa Code Ann. § 252.2 (Liability) Iowa Code Ann. § 252.5 (Remote relatives - Grandparents)

Kansas	No Current Statute	In re Erikson , 180 P.263 (Kan. 1919) (no statute; no duty)
Kentucky	KY. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 530.050 (Crime)	Wood v. Wheat , 11 S.W. 2d 916 (Ky. Ct. App. 1928) (Child voluntarily providing support cannot compel contribution from other children)
Louisiana	La. C.C. Art. 229 (Reciprocal duties; parents & children) La. C.C. Art. 239 (Reciprocal duties; illegitimate children) La. R.S. 13: 4731 (Alimony from children or grandchildren)	In re Succession of Elie , 50 So. 3d 262 (La. Ct. App. 2010) (denying mother's claims for funds from deceased son's estate under Art. 229)
Maine	No Current Statute
Maryland	MD. Code Ann. Fam. Law §§ 13-101 thru 13-109 (Support claims by destitute parent or adult children)	Corby v. McCarthy , 840 A.2d 188 (Md. 2003)(recognizing parents' duty to support adult disabled child)
Massachusetts	Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 273, § 20 (Crime)
Michigan	No Current Statute
Minnesota	No Current Statute
Mississippi	Miss. Code Ann. § 43-31-25 (Liability of parents, grandparents, brothers & sisters)
Missouri	No Current Statute	Roth v. Roth , 571 S.W.2d 659 (Mo. App. 1978) (no statute; no duty)
Montana	Montana Code Ann. § 40-6-214 (Reciprocal duties of parents & children) Montana Code Ann. § 40-6-301 (Duty to support indigent parents)	In re Marriage of Howard , 840 P.2d 1217 (Mont. 1992)(holding that in calculating father's liability for child support, court did not have to deduct sums voluntarily paid by him to his mother, absent showing mother was indigent)
Nebraska	No Current Statute
Nevada	Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 428.070 (Child's duty to reimburse for county hospitalization of indigent parents, where child promised to support parent in writing) Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. §439B.310 (Defining indigent)
New Hampshire	N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 167:2 (Reimbursement to state or county for public assistance to parent) N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 546-A:2 (Liability of spouses, parent, child for reasonable subsistence)
New Jersey	N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 44:4-100 thru 44:4-103 (Liability of parents, spouses and children of poor persons) N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 44:1-139 thru 44:1-142 (Compelling assistance from relatives including children)	Terenzio v. Nelson , 258 A.2d 20 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1969) (permitting cross-border enforcement of prior New York law to recover mother's hospitalizations costs from N.J. son) Pavlick v. Teresinski , 149 A.2d 300 (Juv. & Dom. Rel. 1959) (upholding mother's claim against two sons).
New Mexico	No Current Statute
New York	No Current Statute	Matter of Will of Surut , 535 N.Y.S. 2d 922 (N.Y. Sur. 1988) (daughter had no duty to support mother) In re Mintz , 280 N.Y.S 2d 1007 (N.Y. Sup. 1967)(declining to enforce out-of-state filial law against in-state child)
North Carolina	N.C. Gen. Stat. § 14-326.1 (Crime)
North Dakota	N.D. Cent. Code § 14-09-10	Trinity Medical Ctr. v. Rubbelke , 389 N.W. 2d 805 (N.D. 1986) (holding medical center's release of parents also released children of (Reciprocal duties of parents and child; promise of adult child to pay for necessities furnished to parent is binding)	any obligation under statute).

Ohio	Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2919.21 (Crime)	State v. Flontek , 693 N.E.2d 767 (Ohio 1998) (reversing conviction of daughter for manslaughter & nonsupport of her mother) St. Clare Center, Inc. v. Mueller , 517 N.E.2d 236 (Ohio Ct. App.1986) (holding statute criminalizing failure to provide support for parent does not create civil liability counterpart)
Oklahoma	No Current Statute
Oregon	OR. Rev. Stat § 109.010 (Duty of support for children and parents) Or. Rev. Stat. § 163.205 (Crime)	In re Estate of Hines , 573 P.2d 1260 (Or. 1978) (discussing filial support statute in wrongful death claim, finding statute does not make parents dependents of child) State v. Nolen , 260 P.3d 810 (Or. Ct. App. 2011) (holding that in absence of agreement between mother and son, son had no duty to care for mother and therefore no liability for failing to provide her with care)
Pennsylvania	23 Pa. C.S.A. §§ 4601 thru 4606 (Duty of parents to indigent child and child to indigent parents)	Savoy v. Savoy , 641 A.2d 596, 600 (Pa. Super. 1994) (holding son liable for $150 per month to pay mother's hospital expenses) Presbyterian Med. Ctr. v. Budd , 832 A.2d 1066 (Pa. Super. 2003) (holding statute may be used by nursing home to seek recovery from adult daughter who misused power of attorney and failed to use mother's money to pay for care) Health Care & Retirement Corp. of America v. Pittas , 2012 Pa. Super. 96, ___ A.3d ___, 2012 WL 1571830 (Pa. Super. 2012) (holding son liable to nursing home for $93,000 for mother's six months of care)
Rhode Island	R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 15-10-1 thru 15-10-7 (Penalty for unreasonable neglect of destitute parents) R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 40-5-13 thru 40-5-21 (Obligation of kindred for support)	Landmark Med.Ctr. v. Gauthier , 635 A.2d 1145 (R.I. 1994) (upholding medical center's claim against wife and children for expenses incurred by wife and husband before his death, and children would be liable under both sets of statutes if mother's assets insufficient to cover debt).
South Carolina	No Current Statute
South Dakota	S.D. Codified Law § 25-7-27 (Adult child's duty to support parent) S.D. Codified Law § 25-7-28 (Right of contribution from brothers and sisters) S.D. Codified Laws § 28-13-1.1(Defining "indigent or poor person")	Prairie Lakes Health Care Sys. v. Wookey , 583 N.W.2d 405 (S.D.1998) (holding hospital entitled to make statutory claim against son for father's health care debt, where real estate transfer deemed fraud) Americana Healthcare Ctr. v. Randall , 513 N.W.2d 566 (S.D. 1994) (permitting mother's nursing home to make statutory claim against son to be paid from trust funds inherited from mother) Accounts Management Inc. v. Nelson , 663 N.W. 2d 237 (S.D. 2003) (holding that where hospital's patient (or his estate) was able to provide for himself, the children of the deceased patient were not obliged to pay).
Tennessee	Tenn. Code Ann. § 71-5-103 (Definition of responsible parties includes children) Tenn. Code Ann. § 71-5-115 (Welfare Department may require reimbursement from responsible parties)
Texas	No Current Statute	Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. v. Fierce , 519 S.W.2d 157 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975)(Son had no legal obligation to parent)
Utah	Utah Code Ann. § 17-14-2 (Support of Poor by Relatives: children; parents, brothers and sisters, grandchildren, grandparents)
Vermont	VT. Stat. Ann. Tit. 15, §§ 202 & 203 (Penalties for nonsupport)
Virginia	VA. Code Ann. § 20-88 (Support of parents by children)	Peyton v. Peyton , 8 Va. Cir. 531, 1978 Va. Cir. Lexis 19 (1978) (holding son liable to reimburse brother for mother's past care expenses)

Washington	No Current Statute
Wisconsin	No Current Statute
Wyoming	No Current Statute
West Virginia	W. VA. Code § 9-5-9 (Liability of relatives for support, including children, parents, brothers & sisters)
Puerto Rico	8 L.P.R.A. § 712 (Duty of descendants to the elderly (translated from Spanish))	Chavez v. Hernandez et al. , Civil Núm. KAL 2005-1188, 2008 WL 5561018 (TCA) (P.R. Cir. 2008) (holding four siblings liable equally to pay for mother's care, totaling $1,800 per month plus retroactive payments of $19,000).
District of Columbia	No Current Statute	