175 The New Frontiers of Copyright: Enforceable Rights in the Space Age

James O. Moermond, III

The traditional concepts of copyright law are becoming inadequate to protect the interests of creators in today's global society. The reasons for such inadequacies stem from the emergence of satellite technology and a growing lack of consensus between copyright authors, publishers, and the general public, as to how the property interests should be compensated and enforced. This article is intended to form a foundation for meaningful discussion involving the reformation of the current basis of international copyright protection.

195 An American Perspective on the European Commission's "Amended Proposal for a Council Regulation on the Control of Concentrations Between Undertakings" and its Impact on Hostile Tender Offers

Jeffrey P. Greenbaum

The Amended Proposal for a Council Regulation on the Control of Concentrations Between Undertakings is a European measure in preparation for the unified internal market in 1992. The aim of the proposal is to regulate corporate reorganizations, mergers, and acquisitions resulting from the additional competition likely to emerge from the unified market. This article provides a thorough analysis of the Proposal's intended application in comparison to the American Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act and its potential effectiveness and shortcomings.

213 U.S. Perspectives of Worldwide Unitary Taxation

Massimo Agostini

Presently, American states have the ability to impose taxes on multinational corporations doing business in their respective states. The extent of this imposition is vaguely regulated by federal tax law. In the Container decision, the Supreme Court addressed the need for uniformity of state taxation of foreign corporations. The Court's decision, however, was not well accepted overseas. This article examines the various methods of taxation employed by individual states and the resulting international difficulties of this diversity. Through a discussion of California legislation, which provides a solution, as well as protects domestic and foreign interests, these difficulties are addressed.

229 International Advertising: Regulatory Pitfalls for the Unwary Marketer

Peter L. Tracey

International Advertising has opened new vistas of opportunity for many businesses. The decision to sell across national boundaries, however, means that the marketer must carefully research the advertising customs and regulations of the target market. Failure to tailor a marketing campaign to local requirements may spell disaster for an otherwise viable product.

253 Arrest First, Ask Questions Later: The Japanese Police Detention System

Christopher James Neumann

The Japanese police detention system enables police and prosecutors to detain criminal suspects for up to twenty-three days without a formal charge, thus posing numerous human rights problems. This comment concentrates on the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which provides a means for identifying the human rights abuses occurring under the Japanese police detention system, as well as a method for rectifying such abuses.

277 Shari'a Law in the Sudan: Why it Does Not Work Under the Sudanese Constitutions of 1973 and 1985

Steven C. Sherman

Can Islamic Law co-exist with a democratic constitution? Currently, in Sudan, such a co-existence is not possible. This comment analyzes some of the conflicts between the Shari'a Law of Islam and the Sudanese Constitutions of 1973 and 1985. Through this analysis, the author suggests reasons for the incompatibility of Islamic law and the Sudanese constitutions.
